TRADE DOLLARS

WITH CHINESE CHOP MARKS

This interesting series was struck for trade with the Orient. Our regular Silver Dollars were not popular and often not acceptable due to their low silver content.

In order to increase our commercial trade with China, this Trade Dollar series was started in 1873. However, the wary Chinese customers would not accept them unless guaranteed by the merchants or bankers. Hence the chop-marks were, in effect, endorsements as to their weight and genuineness.

Trade Dollars were accepted at face value in this country until about 1885, but few if any of these coin that actually served their purpose are without chop-marks.

The following is an exceptional offering recently imported from Hong Kong, China.

NOTE: Unless otherwise stated, there will be only one or two chop-marks; "Several" will indicate three to five marks; "Heavily" - five or more, but design still plain.

BRONZES OF THE SECOND REVOLT

In 132 A.D., about 63 years after the destruction of the second Jewish Temple by the Romans under Titus and Vespasian, another revolt flared up.

Very little is known of this revolt except that the aged Rabbi Akiba hailed the leader of this revolt, Simon Bar Kochba, as the long-awaited Messiah.

The revolt was directed against the Emperor Hadrian, who had visited Judaea in 130 A.D. where he promised a Jewish delegation that a temple would be built on the site of the one which had been destroyed earlier. To their dismay the Jews discovered that the Emperor's plan was to build a temple dedicated to Jupiter Capitolinum. This was, to the Jews, a desecration worse than leaving the site in ruins. In the early part of the revolt the Jews managed to exterminate the Roman XXII Legion Deiotariana. They appeared to have liberated Jerusalem and to have driven the Roman garrisons from Palestine. After heavy losses on both sides and under the skillful leadership of Hadrian's best general, Sixtus Julius Severus, the Jews surrendered at Betar and their leader was put to death.

Recently, an exploration of certain caves near the Dead Sea has revealed some documents which pertain to the Second Revolt and at least one of them is thought to have been written, or at least signed, by Bar Kochba. A bronze coin of Bar Kochba was found in a cave near these documents.

One of the remarkable things about the elaborate coinage (45 different types) during this brief revolt was that the Jews, having no metallic ingots of their own, used Roman coins, Roman colonial coins and coins of the city states in the Palestine area. They overstruck their own designs on these coins. When they overstruck copper coins they very often filed off the emperor's image and the legends before heating up the flan and overstriking it. In rare instances on the copper coins, faint traces of the emperor's head still show through the overstrike.

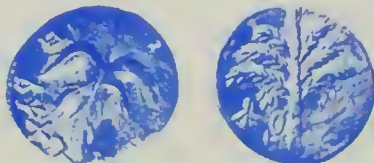

A fascinating recent publication dealing with coins of this period is "The Dating and Meaning of Ancient Jewish Coins and Symbols" -- Six Essays in Jewish Numismatics, a publication of the Israel Numismatic Society, Schocken Publishing House, Jerusalem, 1958. This booklet is certainly the best authority to date on coinage of the Bar Kochba Revolt. After the revolt was crushed in 135 A.D., the nation of Israel ceased to exist until the year 1948!

Last year we offered some of these coins for sale in our monthly bulletin and some of them were sold. We still have a few remaining, however, -among them, one with faint traces of the emperor's head showing through. Since the Departments of Antiquities of the Middle Eastern Countries are clamping down on the export of coins such as these, they are becoming extremely scarce.
